~ Nodding Trillium Trilliums

Trilliums are myrmecochorous, with ants as agents of seed dispersal. Ants are attracted to the elaiosomes on the seeds and collect them and transport them away from the parent plant. The seeds of Trillium camschatcense and T. tschonoskii, for example, are collected by the ants Aphaenogaster smythiesi and Myrmica ruginodis.

Trillium - Wikipedia

Trilliums are generally divided into two major groups: the pedicellate and sessile trilliums. In the pedicellate trilliums, the flower sits upon a pedicel that extends from the whorl of bracts, either [erect] above the bracts, or [nodding] recurved under the bracts.

About Trilliums - US Forest Service

Trilliums are low growing woodland flowers. Most are native to the U.S. and you will often stumble upon a patch of trillium while walking in the woods. Different species favor different areas. Some are showier than others, but what they all share are three leaves, three petals, and three sepals.
